

Oregon Historical Quarterly

The Oregon Historical Quarterly, the journal of record for Oregon history, has been published continuously since 1900. With well-written, illustrated articles, OHQ reaches a large and diverse readership of 5,500 people, including teachers, scholars, families, and others interested in the region's history. Every issue includes well-researched, documented history about Oregon and the Pacific Northwest and reviews of books on western history. With use in libraries, on the World Wide Web, and through subscribers passing their issues along, OHQ is read by several thousand more people than is represented in the subscription total.

Advertising is restricted to books and other materials compatible with the mission of the Oregon Historical Society and the Oregon Historical Quarterly, which promote the study and appreciation of the history of Oregon and the Oregon Country. All ads, except those on the inside back cover, appear in the book review and letters section of the journal.
